

SMALL NEWSPAPERS.

After the Examiner had sent out a tug and two reporters to save a man's life at the risk of their own, only three San Francisco newspapers—the Alta, Stock Report and Journal of Commerce made the slightest mention of it.

When such a noble piece of work as the rescue of human life confronts us, all petty business jealousies should be forgotten. In the face of the noble courage which is required to "pluck a life from the dread sweep of the downstreaming sea," small rivalries should be set aside.

The Chronicle would have done a graceful thing to have made an editorial acknowledgement of the courage of Haxton and Kelly and paid a tribute to the enterprise of its rival. But it seems to lack the soul.

THE LITTLE GROVER.

Ex-President Cleveland has taken the pains to state that he does not speak to Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun.

The Sun is a considerably bigger institution than Grover Cleveland. A big newspaper is not the growth of a few months like an official fungus; it is built up by talent and brains, and a man who directs a big New York newspaper would be an ass to care a copper's flip about the recognition of officials whose shortcomings had to be criticised.

When an official quits speaking to a newspaper editor because he has been criticised, it shows pretty conclusively that the critical arrow has hit a vital spot.

The time for somebody to feel bad was when Dana quit recognizing the President.

THAT UNUSED APPROPRIATION.

If a proper understanding could be reached with the farmers of the Carson Valley, the Chronicle believes that now would be a good time to inaugurate the application of the fund appropriated by the State Legislature a year ago. The Commissioners were named in the bill who had the right of the disposition of the money and the location of the place where the works should be erected. As the Carson Valley is the place where the appropriation would benefit the largest number of people, it seems a pity that some agreement for an equitable division of the waters of the river cannot be arrived at, the more especially as the river can be made to supply more water than the farmers and miners need.

The United States survey has indicated the proper places where dams could be built, and by carrying out the requirements of the Act of the Legislature the beautiful valley may not only be benefited, the mills on the Carson river allowed to run the year around, and a threatened lawsuit between the mill owners and farmers in the valley avoided.—Chronicle.

Frozen to Death.

NEVADA CITY, Jan. 6.—Malcolm F. McLeod, employed as a mail carrier, was frozen to death this morning. Yesterday, he and John Grisell started on snow shoes to carry the mail and express to Washington, eight miles distant, expecting to get there by dark. Each had a twenty pound load. Two miles below Washington McLeod began to fail. His companion carried and dragged McLeod to within half a mile of town but could not get him beyond there. He went into town for relief and a party of citizens hastened to the relief of McLeod. He was still breathing when they reached him, but died before they got him to town. The carriers had become bewildered and traveled in a circle many hours.

Very Cold in Elko.

ELKO, Nev., Jan. 8.—The spirit thermometer here last night reached forty-five degrees below zero, and this evening it is thirty-four. It is believed to be utterly impossible, with the present depth of snow and cold weather, for range stock to survive.
